We publish this morning a communication from a gentleman residing in Caroline county, urging tax-payers to pay their taxes in money and not in coupens. To what he so well says we would add that in a smuch as the State government has to be supported, there must be money enough paid into the Treasury for that purpose. Therefore, if the tax-payers should be unwise and unpatriotic enough to pay all their taxes in coupons, the result would be that the Legislature would be compelled to levy an additional tax for the support of the government.

The public schools must be kept up. Dare any man to say that he is willing to see them closed? Is not every man who pays his taxes in coupons doing all that he can to put an end to the business of educating the children of this Commonwealth? Crime must be punished. To punish it, the State officials must have money-not coupons. The courts of justice must be kept open. To keep these open requires money-not coupons. The lunatics must be cared for. To care for them the officers and directors of the asylums must have money-not coupons. The deaf and dumb and the blind must be provided for. To provide for them, the State must have money-not coupons. In a word, the whole machinery of the State government must be kent in motion, if it is kept in motion at all, by the use of money. Coupons will not answer the purpose. Coupons will not educate children, nor punish crime. nor administer justice as between man and man, nor feed and clothe the lunatics, nor instruct the deaf and dumb and the blind, nor do any of the thousand and one things which all good Govern-

Another Interrogatory.

We find that our recent object lesson has not converted our friend of the Charleston News and Courier from the error of his monometallistic ways. We reasonable in his utterances, as witness the following:

"In the first place, we have not said that 'the more promise to redeem paper dollars in gold makes these paper dollars better than silver dollars.' There is no promise or engagement to redeem the paper dollars in gold; they are re-deemable, or payable, in coin—i. e., in gold or silver. We said distinctly that, apart from any question of convertibility,' silver dollars are 'worth more than paper dollars in the measure of the relative value of silver bullion and bank-note paper.' That is, the silver, as such, has a higher market value than paper has, weight for weight. Even when paper dollars, which are legal tender, are not convertible, they have, as long as they are current as a medium of exchange, or as long as they a value higher than that of bank pa-

"Silver has a high market value independent of any legal-tender quality, and in dealing with silver, therefore, there is less risk of loss than in dealing with bank notes. The issuer of the bank notes can refuse to redeem them, as a State can refuse to pay its debts; and, when the debtor cannot be sued, the holder of the repudiated notes has nothing but so much waste paper to show for what is due him. The silver dollar, however, is worth, as silver about eighty-three cents in gold, whether the Government treats it as legal tender

That is good doctrine to come from a monometallist. But we are not sure that the following will stand the test of investigation. Our contemporary silver, she would lose by the operation three hundred thousand dollars. Our interrogatory is, Can France afford to do so foolish a thing?

SAYS: "Were the Government to exchange gold dollars for silver dollars in the way that the Dispatch proposes, the Government would simply be in the position of buying at par, in gold, dolars which it had issued and made legal tender as equal to gold."

To redeem valueless paper dollars is wise and statesmanlike and worthy of great financiers. To redeem valuable silver dollars "would be simply buying silver at par." Now, wouldn't redeeming paper dollars be "buying paper dollars at par "? If not, why not? You admit of course that the ed the same rule for the present campaper dollars none. But you think it to deem the valueless dollars !

We quote again : begin with, it is not 'the mere promise to pay ' in gold (or coin) which imparts redeem them."

We make no objection to the change of phrase. We will adopt it, and repeat our question : If the public confidence in the ability and willingness of the Government to redeem the green- tution, and that the interview published backs keeps these greenbacks at par, why would not the public confidence in keep these at par?

The recent decisions of Judge Bond and the Supreme Court of the United States have wellnigh started the people of Virginia; but there are some taxpayers among us whose inclination to use coupons in payment of taxes prompts them to insist that there is no obligation on them to regard public sentiment nor party resolutions on this subject, because the law allows them to pay their taxes in coupons. And in furtherance of this aim, attention is called to the recent suits brought against the treasurers of King William, Fauquier, and Goochland counties for the sum of $6,000 each, for levving and collecting taxes according to the laws of Virginia, under which laws they are elected and sworn to serve.

He writes to a local paper that he has a letter from the late General O. E. Babcock, which gives a recently printed in New York journals. The occasion of General Babcock's letter came about in this way: I had a son born in Hayti July 7, 1872, who was named after General Grant. I had seen the allegations that the General's Christian names were Hiram Ulysses, and later on in the year, during the presidential canvass, I read at Port au Prince, in an American journal, Roscoe Conkling's New York speech, in which he was represented calling the President "Ulysses Sidney Grant." The "Sidney" was probably a typographical error, but it occurred several times in the copy of the speech that I saw. Under these circumstances, when I came to the United States in the early winter of 1874, I brought the matter to the attention of General Babcock, who was then, and for several years had been, the President's private secretary and intimate personal friend. Following is the letter written in reply by General EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Dec. 29, 1874. Dear Sir,-In reply to your letter I would say that General Grant's christened name was Hiram Ulysses. He was appointed to West Point by mistake of the honorable member of Congress as Ulysses S. Grant. This being a clerical error it was supposed it could be corrected at the academy, but it passed into the records as Ulysses S. Grant and finally into his commission, been from that and has adopted both by his family and himself. The gentleman appointing him confounded the name of a younger brother with his, the middle name of the younger brother being Simpson.

I have read the above to the President, and he says it is correct. With kind regards, I am very truly yours, O. E. BARCOCK. Mr. Bassett adds: "The fact of from Drowning in Baltimore. An exciting incident of Monday's storm and flood in Baltimore is thus described by the Sun: At 5 o'clock in the afternoon the seven-year-old son of Mr. William Mc-Sweeney, of Front and Centre streets, while playing about Jones's falls at Centre-Street bridge, fell overboard. The stream, owing to the heavy rains, was very high and the current was running strong. The little fellow was whirled away on the tide, tumbling over in the disturbed waters. In a mo ment he was at Bath-Street bridge. carried along swiftly by the torrent. Then to Hillen street he was swept, where a number of people, drawn by the wild gesticulations of those on the bridges above, saw him pass Among them was Thomas Lally, a young man living in the neighborhood. He saw the boy just as he passed under Bath-Street bridge, and, running at topspeed along Front street, darted down a ten-foot alley which ran into the falls thirty yards north of Gay street. Thus, short of breath after his hard run, he jumped on the retaining wall, and, without hesitation to take off his coat or shoes, or even his hat, leaped Richmond under such instructions as into the water to save the boy, who was being rapidly carried down the stream. Swimming out he caught the little fellow in time and brought him back to the east wall. Here, just at Gay-Street bridge, a large iron pipe, the outlet for a sewer, juts out beyond the wall, and to this Lally, with his inanimate burden, clung. Rain had not fallen for some minutes before, and the sewer was free of water. Lally thrust the little fellow into it and crawled in afterwards himself amidst hurrahs from the crowds on Gay and Aillen-Street bridges. The boy, as soon as he was gotten ashore, was rolled and other remedies applied. In a short time he was brought to consciousness and out of danger. To the swift current of the stream, which kept him mostly on the top, and to Lally's judgment and pluck, he owes his life. In all he was carried nearly a quarter

A Dog Trees One Man and Captures Another with His Teeth. [Rochester Democrat.]

A lively little episode occurred on Moulson street yesterday, which, for a time, made things interesting to people in the immediate neighborhood. Charles Bachmann is the name of a German who keeps a saloon and grocery on Moulson street, near the Central Hudson railway. About noon yesterday two suspicious - looking characters entered his place and called for a quart of beer. Mr. Bachmann keeps his beer in the cellar and has to go down there to draw it. While he was in the cellar the men proceeded to take a quantity of jewelry, etc., from the show-case, and ran. Mr. Bachmann noticed the condition of affairs, and going to the door saw the men running down the street. He called his big Newfoundland and pointed out the fagitives. The dog understood matters and started. Within two minutes one man was up a tree and the other against a fence with the dog's teeth in a necessary part of his costume. Offioers Schwartz and Ries, who live near by, were sent for, and marched their prisoners to the police station. All the jewelry was recovered. The men, who gave their names as George Green and Benjamin Sherman, are believed to be members of a gang who have infested the vicinity of Ames street considerably of late, breaking statement in conflict with declarations into freight-cars, stoning trains, and doing other acts of lawlessness.
